Businessman: Current plan for spurring job growth isn't working

Baltimore Business Journal

Editor:

The U.S. unemployment rate remained at 10 percent this month, and the rate rose to 17.3 percent for those who have stopped looking for a job or are in a part-time job because they cannot find full-time work. Obviously, the current plan for spurring job growth is not working.

Job creation happens because business managers and entrepreneurs are bullish about the future. When they are bullish, they believe that client demand will increase and therefore they need to hire people to grow their businesses. So we have to create a positive climate for U.S. job creation.

Cut income taxes to 12.5 percent: Being the second-highest taxing country isn't working for the U.S. If the government takes less, the people have more, and they will spend it or save it.

Our employees deserve to keep more of what they earn. Let the government figure out how to get along with less; the working people have been doing this long enough.
